The adoption by the Conference of Britis and Colonial Chambers of Commerce of a re solution declaring that the remonetization of silver would relieve the depression under which trade is now staggering is the most important event that has yet transpired in the endeavour to rehabilitate silver-more important eventhan the refusal of the United States Legislature to repeal the Bland Act. for in the latter case the silver advocates. merely achieved success in a defensive movement, whereas in the former they were acting on the offensive. The campaign has now been fairly inaugurated, and the issue will ere long be brought to a contest in Parliament. From the telegram we published on Saturday from the American papers it is difficult to gather any comprehensive idea of the debate. One thing is clear, however, namely, that the discussion turned largely on the effect the remonetisation of silver would have on India. We are told that-" Two Indian members contended that the effect of the depreciation of silver must be finally the ruin of the wheat and cotton industries of America and the development of India as the chief wheat and cotton exporter of the world. They, therefore, protested against England aiding America to restore the value of silver at the expense of the interests of India. PAUL F. TIDLAN, an East India merchant, argued that England had other interests besides those of India, which stood sorely in need of the restoration of silver. and trusted that GIBBS' ideas would be ad opted by the meeting." It is high time the idea that the depreciation of silver is good numbered amongst exploded fallacies. previous articles we have endeavoured to explain that India can really get no more now Tientsin line. in exchange for her exports than she could before the disturbance of exchange, and we note with satisfaction that the same point for this port to effect certain repairs and alterais made by Professor Nicholson in his re- following day to the Cavite arsenal on account of cently published and valuable series of papers one of her engines having broken down, left again on the silver question. A large number of the specimens he stated were of terrace The proceedings then terminated .- Investors' formation, apparently the White Terrace. One piece for examination was of basalt rock such as he had never seen in this district before. It had evidently been thrown from a vast depth. Some of the pieces he said appeared to be of the silica lining of the tube which led from the bottom of the terrace to the depths below. He thought there was little doubt that the statements of the eruptions at Wairos were correct—first a burst of flame into the air, then of streams of fire fulling into the Tarawera was formerly a volcano, and it had got scaled over with obsidian, which had formed a sort of bottle-glass dome over it, hermetically scaling it. The pent-up forces had now blown the dome away. This tremendous explosion had stattered the tubes of piping of the White and This led down the whole of Lake Rotomshana and generated an inconceivably enormous body whole valley and the adjoining ravine in the air. He stated that there was nothing in the characthink that there was any molten lava in the eruption. There were two classes of volcanoesone that threw out molten lava, and the other simply ejected steam and mud. The latter were and progress, so far as he could gather from the on facts he has been able to ascertain. When asked
